Drew has a mind that remembers every moment of his life. Maybe that's why he can't let go of his ex-wife and why he still remembers the software he developed for unmanned flying vehicles for the military. Their son Nathan grew up feeling inferior to his dad and volunteered to go to war. He once met Ramiro, a pilot who never gets to fly, but fires weapons from a desert in Nevada. When Ramiro is held responsible for a predator-drone friendly fire incident, how will the survivors piece together a future while absorbing a wounded past?
