Laying Birds

(Chicken)

As hatched (not sexed) are available ask for pricing

White Rocks

The White Plymouth Rock chicken is a good dual purpose chicken, a good pet chicken, a member of the Plymouth Rock family and known by their short name as a white rock chicken . They lay large to extra large brown eggs and the cockerels make very good fryers. White Rocks hens have similar characteristics as the Barred Rocks, except they are pure white in color. White Rocks are great chickens to have in a backyard flock.!

New Hampshires

A deep, broad body chicken that grow feathers very rapidly. They are prone to go broody and make good mothers. New Hampshires are producers of brown eggs. Some strains lay eggs of a dark brown shell color. If you wish a bird that matures early, lays good, and is of heavy weight, then the New Hampshire is what you're looking for.

Barred Rocks

The Barred Standard Plymouth Rock Chicken is a great back yard poultry for production and very kid friendly chicken. Barred Rock chickens produce a brown egg. These chickens are reliable for consistent egg production and are very hardy. They have lovely plumage, large bodies and a calm demeanor.

1

Rhode Island Reds

They are a popular chicken choice for backyard chicken flocks because of their egg laying abilities and hardiness. Rhode Island Red chicks are a good choice for raising baby chickens naturally and raising baby chickens for eggs. These are an old time favorite because of their impressive body size, consistent egg production and hardiness. This breed is a brown egg producer.

White Leghorns

White Leghorns are high egg producers. This breed is very athletic, hardy, non-sitters and lay very nice large/X large white eggs. They have a good feed-to-egg conversion ratio They have a consistent egg quality and great shell strength. This chicken breed is great for free range chicken farming or organic free range chicken eggs. A real profitable egg producer!

Barred Rock Cross Sex-Links

Outstanding layers with hybrid vigor. This dual purpose bird will give you both meat and egg production. Pullets are black. Cockerels barred color. Eggs will be brown.

Golden Comets

Golden Comet Laying Hens. Golden Comets are a Modern day egg laying strain of chicken. They are a cross between a Rhode Island Red and White Leghorn chicken. The hybrid vigor gives them the best traits of both breeds. Like leghorns they start laying earlier than any other breed and are prolific layers. These chicks are brown

Buff Orpington

This breed is a large, stately chicken with a quiet disposition. Buff Orpington chickens are one of the best chickens for eggs and lay a medium brown egg. Even though the Buff Orpington chicken is a very heavy and large bird, this does not always mean the bigger the hen the larger the egg. Buff Orpingtons make excellent broody mothers for baby chicks.

Bantams

(25 bird minimum no sexing)

Bantams are suitable for smaller backyards as they do not need as much space as other breeds. Bantam hens are also used as laying hens, with some breeds laying up to 150 eggs per year. However, Bantam eggs are only about one-half to one-third the size of a regular hen egg. The Bantam chicken eats the same foods as a normal chicken. Bantams have become increasingly popular as pets as well as for show purposes because they are smaller and have more varied and exotic colors and feather patterns than other chickens. Many bantam hens are renowned for hatching and brooding. They are very protective mothers and will attack anything that gets near their young.

Availability depends on breed (see below)

French (Available April and May)

Known for their fast growth rate and tender, lean meat, they are a popular choice for free range farmers, restaurants and others seeking a hearty meat producing bird. French Guinea Keets grow twice as fast and can weigh up to 2 pounds more than common Guinea Fowl. Full-grown Guinea Hens are often noted for their protective personalities and ornamental appearance. French Guineas are also helpful at keeping insects at bay, particularly ticks, so they are perfect for farm environments and backyard growers as well.

Pearl (Available May-September)

The Pearl Grey Guinea fowl has dark gray plumage speckled with rows of tiny white spots, giving it a beautiful and distinctive appearance. This is the traditional and most common variety of Guinea fowl. These small birds are one of the most overlooked allies you can have in your garden, orchard or pasture. Lively and alert, Guinea fowl will know when something is amiss in their territory, and they will make a racket. Despite this, they are calm and gentle toward their owners when raised from keets. They are also great foragers and will keep ticks, grubs and worms away from your grass or garden.

Meat Birds

(Chicken)

White Jumbo Cornish Rock Cross Broilers

This is a cross between the Commercial Cornish chicken and a White Rock chicken. They were developed for the commercial meat chicken market and have been dominating it for the past fifty years. Cornish game hens for sale can reach 4 1/2 lbs by 6 weeks of age and cockerels 6 lbs by 6 weeks of age. This breed is bred specifically to butcher or harvest and is not recommended for a pet and only as chickens for meat production. This breed is your best option for efficient feed/time to

Jumbo Cornish Rock Cockerels

The best quality broiler type available, these birds are bred for quick growth, broad breast, thighs, and legs. Ready to dress out in 6 to 8 weeks. Whether fryers or roasters, this bird will meet your needs

Freedom Ranger Broiler Chicks

These are a great alternative to fast-growing white broiler chicks or slow-growing heritage breeds. Freedom Ranger chicks grow at a moderate rate, reaching their peak weight of 5-6 lbs in 9 to 11 weeks. These active, robust chicks are suitable for free range, foraging and pasture environments and produce tender, succulent meat with more yellow omega 3 fat and less saturated fat than fast growing breeds.

Rhode Island Reds

They are a popular chicken choice for backyard chicken flocks because of their egg laying abilities and hardiness. Rhode Island Red chicks are a good choice for raising baby chickens naturally and raising baby chickens for eggs. These are an old time favorite because of their impressive body size, consistent egg production and hardiness. This breed is a brown egg producer.

White Chinese

The White Chinese goose is one of the smallest domesticated geese breeds, and it is also a prolific egg-layer. An excellent forager, this goose is an independent and self-sufficient breed. It is also protective of its nest and will honk loudly if it is confronted. Outwardly, it is among the most elegant breeds, as its long neck and snow-white feathers closely resemble a swan. White Chinese geese are great for orchards, gardens and pastures, but are not recommended as pets.

Goslings

(8 bird minimum)

White Embdens

This snowy white goose is what most people see when they think of a domestic goose. With a stout, round body, graceful neck and round head, the White Embden goose grows quickly and reaches a large size. With females at about 20 pounds and males at about 30, they are very popular among meat-production farmers. These geese will protect their nests and their territory from predators, making them easy to breed, but are not overly territorial towards owners or other pets.

Toulouse

The Toulouse goose is a large, stout goose raised for its heavy weight, moderate egg production and striking physical attributes. The Toulouse goose is often raised for meat, particularly its historic purpose, pate foie gras. Laying between 25 and 40 eggs a year and growing quickly to between 14 lbs - 18 lbs, Toulouse geese are popular among hobby farmers, family farms and small commercial farms. Cackle Hatchery's® flock of Toulouse geese are a production type and not the exhibition type that have the pronounced dewlap, keel and size.

Standard Africans

African geese are actually close relatives of the Chinese goose and bear some similarities. The African goose is heavier, with ganders reaching about 20 pounds, making it a good addition to meat-production flocks. Females produce up to 50 large, white eggs a year and also reach a large size. The black knob above the beak which develops into adulthood, and the dewlap under the beak, give its head a distinctive shape. These geese are vocal and protect their territory, though they can be raised from chicks as gentle family pets.

Buff Orpington

This breed is a large, stately chicken with a quiet disposition. Buff Orpington chickens are one of the best chickens for eggs and lay a medium brown egg. Even though the Buff Orpington chicken is a very heavy and large bird, this does not always mean the bigger the hen the larger the egg. Buff Orpingtons make excellent broody mothers for baby chicks.

Colored Indian Runners

Indian Runners are active ducks that enjoy foraging for slugs and insects. One of their original . There are a number of different colour varieties of Indian Runner duck available but the Standards do vary by region. Indian ducks are possibly the most influential of all of the duck breeds. Many of today's breeds of light duck have in part been created from the Indian Runner Duck. Indian Runners are good for eggs and good for organic pest control, particularly in vineyards.

Blue Swedish

The Blue Swedish Duck is among the oldest domesticated ducks and is still a favorite today. With a large size (up to eight pounds), hardiness adapted to cold climates and an interesting blueish-gray appearance, the Blue Swedish Duck is easy to raise, care for and keep. This breed's unique plumage allows it to blend in and makes it difficult for predators to target. This breed is also good-natured and calm, making them great family pets and especially popular among young children.

Muscovy

The original (wild type) coloration is black and white, but domestication has produced many more colors, including white, black, chocolate, and blue. The males are large, weighing up to twelve pounds, with the smaller females reaching only seven pounds. Their feet have strong sharp claws and are built to grasp, so that they can perch on branches. Some people consider them ugly because of the large red warty caruncles above the beak and around the eyes. They are, however, very personable and interesting birds, and quite intelligent. Unlike most domestic waterfowl, Muscovies will often fly up and roost. They fly fairly well, especially the smaller females, but are known more for flying around than flying away!

Turkey Poults

(15 bird minimum)

Large Broad Breasted Bronze

The Bronze Broad Breasted turkey is an excellent turkey to raise for family meat production and has an excellent feed to meat conversion rate. However, generally the Broad Breasted Bronze turkey does not reproduce very well because of their large size.

Large Broad Breasted White

The White Broad Breasted Turkey is the most common of commercial broad breasted strains of eating Turkeys on the market today. The White Broad Breasted Turkey is also one of the largest of the breeds and generally are not able to reproduce very well. Most Americans at Thanksgiving time are sitting down to a table with a White Broad Breasted Turkey.

Ducklings

(15 bird minimum)

White Pekin

The White Pekin duck has a fast growth rate making it an excellent choice for meat. They are entertaining and very active with a good hatching ability. White Pekin baby ducklings are one of the cutest and most popular ducks for pets.

Rouens

Rouen ducks are the basic coloration of the Mallards only larger and do not fly more than 100 feet. They are a French breed that is used both for eggs and meat. A great water fowl for the ranch pond, they make good backyard ducks and are good for insect control. The Rouen duck is calm, sociable and very entertaining as pets. The Rouen duck is a slower grower than the Pekin. They also make good show ducks.

Mallards

Mallard ducks are the most common and recognizable wild ducks in the Northern Hemisphere. The male mallard duck, called a drake, sports a glossy green head, a white ring around its neck and a rich, chestnut-brown breast. The mottled brown female mallard looks downright dull next to the male's showy feathers. Because Mallard ducks are known to be most social birds it is in the Mallards' best interests if Mallard ducklings are raised in the company of other Mallard ducks and not alone. Mallards are also known to be naturally timid toward humans.
