

I was born and raised in Southern California, but I have lived and traveled all over the world since my husband joined the U.S. Military. I have one son, who lives, and attends college, in Northern California. I have been involved in the education system since 2009. I started as a classroom aide, then became a substitute teacher, and finally finished my degree and began teaching full time. I am honored and proud to be able to be part of the HDLA family. It is truly a second home and the students and staff are second to none.
