About Multnomah Falls and the Lodge

- Approximately 300 acres surrounding Multnomah Falls was originally owned by lumber baron Simon Benson who later passed ownership to the USDA Forest Service
- The Lodge was designed by Portland architect A.E. Doyle and built in 1925 by the city of Portland at a cost of approximately $40,000
- The Benson Bridge was built in 1914 by Simon Benson, a wooden bridge had previously been in its place
- The year round water flow is fed by underground springs on Larch mountain as well as snow melt and rain water
- The large pictures that decorate the Great Room and lobby were photographed by Fred Kiser in the 1920's, purchased and enlarged by the WPA in the 1930's
- The Historic Columbia River Highway was constructed from 1913 to 1922, after promotion from lawyer and railroad executive Sam Hill who envisioned it to be modeled after great scenic roads of Europe
