Life Insurance

Taking steps to protect your family's income is a caring and responsible act. If you're considering life insurance, then you are ready to create your own plan for the future – one you and your family can depend on.

The first step towards protecting your family is to determine the right amount of life insurance. If you're unsure about how much protection is enough, you're in good company. Many Americans have a difficult time determining how much life insurance is right for them and as a result, leave their families unprotected.

How Much Life Insurance Do I Need?

Your Financial Services Representative can quickly and easily determine how much life insurance you need to help ensure your family is financially protected. Human Life Value or Capital Needs Analysis is a simple way to quantify the economic value you provide to your family's household.

Human Life Value:

Your economic contribution to your family

- The goal is to replace lost financial contribution
- Does not take into account actual income needs, existing assets or a spouse's income
- Total life insurance recommendation will typically be higher than Capital Needs Analysis calculation

Capital Needs Analysis:

Your family's future financial needs

- Focuses on income needs of surviving family members
- Takes assets and other sources of income into account
- Total life insurance recommendation will typically be lower than Human Life Value calculation
