

LEAD WELL

Reinventing Continuously

Lead Well Podcast Episode 2 - Mark Miller

- 1) Great leaders reinvent continuously. Reinvention is not a one-time event, it's a lifestyle.
 - What does reinvention look like to you?
 - What is one specific area under your leadership that is currently in need of reinvention?

- 2) The best leaders understand that progress is always preceded by change. In our world, the answers of yesterday are far less relevant today.
 - Take a minute to explore the idea that change brings about progress. When, in your leadership journey, have you experienced effective alignment after change?
 - As you analyze this experience, what factors drove the need for reinvention?

- 3) The most progressive leaders are proactive in their approach to change and reinvention—they make the waves instead of riding them!
 - It is possible to experience a level of progress as a result of unintended change. As a leader, how do you avoid riding waves and instead develop strategies to intentionally reinvent yourself, your team or business?

- 4) Creativity is a leader's superpower! Leaders should be able to see the future and, through creativity, take others to a place that doesn't exist today.
 - As our world rapidly evolves, how can you leverage creativity as a tool to outpace society's new technology, demands and expectations?
 - How can a lifestyle of continuous reinvention sharpen your creative skills?

Take Action:

A lifestyle of continuous reinvention begins here:

- Reinvent yourself - Leaders are learners. The speed of a leader is the speed of the team. Where in your personal life do you need to see an improved outcome? Start there!

- Reinvent your work process (systems) - Hope is not a strategy for improvement. What changes are you willing to make to your systems/processes that will give you a different outcome?
