

Latitude Horizon Fund

Investment Objective

The objective of the Latitude Horizon Fund is to deliver capital appreciation over the long term by holding a concentrated portfolio of stocks, whilst lowering the equity risk and enhancing return through a selection of non-equity investments.

August Commentary

Modern capitalism tends to create duopoly and monopoly market structures. This can be seen in market valuations for the very largest businesses. Apple, for example, is now as large as the entire Russell 2000 index of US mid-caps, or alternatively all 100 stocks in the UK's FTSE.

This statistic may seem asinine but it drives a broader point, that there is no such thing as absolute valuation, only relative valuation. Investors always choose between different homes for their capital. This cycle, the fact that bonds offer zero returns trumps most other considerations, and demand for stocks has risen in response. Cash holdings pay you zero, and bonds offer similarly negligible returns, with far higher risks.

This situation, of financial assets being compared to cash itself, has driven massive inflation in these asset prices. This has been renewed as walls of cash flooded into the system in response to the pandemic. In the last crisis this cash was funneled through the financial system, and this time it has come directly through retail investors, particularly in the US.

This will not lead to "Main Street" inflation as there is little trickle down effect. Those who already own assets, or are wealthy enough to buy them, are the main beneficiaries, yet also have the lowest marginal propensity to spend the windfall profits. Perhaps it is hoped that Robinhood investors will exit their tech stocks in time to spend the profits on goods and services. Historic examples do not bode well, however.

The lack of Main Street inflation is self-referential to asset price inflation, the lower it stays the higher asset prices can inflate, safe in the knowledge that interest rates will not rise. If they did, this would drive prospective bond returns higher relative to stocks.

When does this end? Still with inflation which, if not led by wages, will have to be led by higher commodity prices or higher import costs due to lower domestic exchange rates.

It's wise to consider owning some commodity producing stocks or businesses which benefit from higher commodity prices, as these are cheap, cash generative, and offer real portfolio diversification in that scenario.

Meanwhile, mind your eye in FX markets as all is not what it seems. The USD is not a de facto store of value, it is an expression of relative interest rates, like every other currency. The reserve status affords it a position where the Fed can often raise rates sooner than others, but should not and does not confer a structural valuation premium.

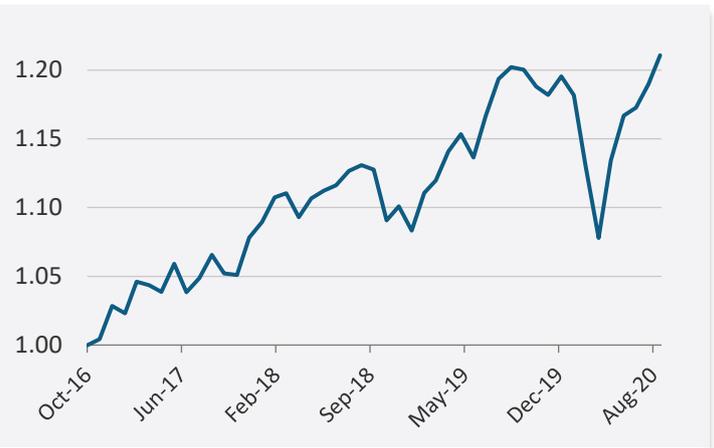

We have made some meaningful changes to the portfolio in early September and will provide an update on these in next month's factsheet.

Strategy's Previous Track Record¹ - This is a composite of Freddie Lait's performance in long-only global absolute return portfolios principally the Odey Atlas Fund ("Atlas") he managed from 19 October 2012 to 31 October 2016 during his time at Odey Asset Management LLP ("Odey") and Latitude Horizon Fund performance data since launch 1 November 2016. The information above and below is for information purposes, only the Latitude Horizon Fund is being offered for investment. Performance above is for the Atlas Fund I share class, net of fees and other charges. Past performance does not guarantee future results and the value of all investments and the income derived therefrom can decrease as well as increase. Investments that have an exposure to currencies other than the base currency of the strategy may be subject to exchange rate fluctuations. The data above and below reflects the reinvestment of all interest and dividends received. The Latitude Horizon Fund is a long only UCITS fund managed with similar investment guidelines, using the same investment process and subject to similar fees and charges. For full details always refer to the prospectus. While every effort will be made to manage the Latitude Horizon Fund in the same manner there is no guarantee that there will be similar performance. Note that Atlas Fund changed from a long only UCITS fund to a long-short UCITS fund on 23 April 2014. In order to show a consistent long term track record for Freddie Lait which is a more accurate representation of how the Latitude Horizon Fund will be managed, the performance of Atlas in the chart above from 23 April 2014 to 31st October 2016 is a carve-out of his actual long only portfolio over this period, which includes his long only equity and non-equity positions, rebased to cancel out any effects from leverage. Further details on the carve-out are available upon request.
