December Commentary

The seeds of successive market cycles always grow from the ashes of the last, and it takes time to see what flourishes. The next three to five years are going to be like no post-recession phase in history, due to the unusual starting point. Stock markets tend to take years not months to recover from shocks such as those in 2020. Yet, this cycle, many of the world’s largest technology companies benefitted from the crisis, buoying markets due to their weight in the indices, which is the highest and most concentrated in history.

As we emerge from lockdowns and other government interventions, many of these companies will slow, and the current engine of the markets growth will splutter. Some businesses will not survive at all. Many will end up stronger. The struggle between these various parts of the market will define its overall performance (judged by earnings power).

The other variable which determines market valuations is of course interest rates. The lower they stay, and the more money governments print, the more attractive cash-generating assets like stocks become. We have discussed this in several recent factsheets, and it seems clear that interest rates will stay low for as long as possible. That is, as long as inflation remains under control.

To our mind therefore, companies which are: cheap due to recent earnings weakness; are competitively positioned to emerge stronger; and will benefit from the threat of higher inflation, deserve to be core holdings within a portfolio. All additions to the fund last year fit these criteria, and we added to our holdings in the US banking sector particularly due to this view.

Our three US banks (JPMorgan, Bank of America, Goldman Sachs) currently trade at valuations that do not reflect their excellent market positions. They have recently been allowed to restart their share buyback programs, having proved themselves to have excess capital even during this extremely difficult environment.

The group should continue to generate double digit growth in intrinsic value per share over the long term, as recent technology investments bear fruit and smaller competitors struggle to keep up. Moreover, if inflation or rates increase over the next few years, earnings can grow by a further 10% for every 100bps rise.

Add on top the potential for the stocks to trade at more justifiable valuations, and overall returns for investors should be very strong indeed.

Strategy's Previous Track Record¹ - This is a composite of Freddie Lait's performance in long-only global absolute return portfolios principally the Odey Atlas Fund ("Atlas") he managed from 19 October 2012 to 31 October 2016 during his time at Odey Asset Management LLP ("Odey") and Latitude Horizon Fund performance data since launch 1 November 2016. The information above and below is for information purposes, only the Latitude Horizon Fund is being offered for investment. Performance above is for the Atlas Fund I share class, net of fees and other charges. Past performance does not guarantee future results and the value of all investments and the income derived therefrom can decrease as well as increase. Investments that have an exposure to currencies other than the base currency of the strategy may be subject to exchange rate fluctuations. The data above and below reflects the reinvestment of all interest and dividends received. The Latitude Horizon Fund is a long only UCITS fund managed with similar investment guidelines, using the same investment process and subject to similar fees and charges. For full details always refer to the prospectus. While every effort will be made to manage the Latitude Horizon Fund in the same manner there is no guarantee that there will be similar performance. Note that Atlas Fund changed from a long only UCITS fund to a long-short UCITS fund on 23 April 2014. In order to show a consistent long term track record for Freddie Lait which is a more accurate representation of how the Latitude Horizon Fund will be managed, the performance of Atlas in the chart above from 23 April 2014 to 31st October 2016 is a carve-out of his actual long only portfolio over this period, which includes his long only equity and non-equity positions, rebased to cancel out any effects from leverage. Further details on the carve-out are available upon request.
