

The Prairie House – Memory Care

At The Prairie House at Lawrence Presbyterian Manor, we understand the dilemma faced by family and caregivers of those living with memory impairment. The desire to care for your loved one yourself may be strong, and the realization that the situation may be more than you can handle can be difficult.

The Prairie House is specifically for those with early- to middle-stage memory loss. It's a place designed to provide the compassionate care and support your loved one needs and deserves. Whether memory loss is caused by Alzheimer's, another form of dementia or a related illness, Lawrence Presbyterian Manor offers a secure and comforting environment with programs designed to engage the mind, as well as social opportunities and professional support to meet your loved one's needs.

Each employee who provides care for residents receives ongoing education and training to stay current in the best ways to care for the needs of residents with memory loss.

Covered services include:

Caring for the whole person

The Prairie House provides the staff support, care, programs and services your loved one needs. This isn't a one-size-fits-all program, as we look at your loved one as an individual with their own interests. Our goal is to help them feel comfortable and secure. You get the added peace of mind that professional staff is available at any time.

Rather than being isolated at home, your loved one is surrounded by people who care and programs that will continue to stimulate their mind and spirit.
