Response example 1:

I find Leila’s answer on the topic of online learning very well-put and insightful. She not only considered the pros and cons of online learning very soundly, but she also gave opposing examples between students who could thrive in online learning and students who might have difficulty.

On my part, I mostly agree with what she says because, from my real-world observations of school, I do find that many students only learn to pass their classes. Furthermore, I find that memorization is valued over genuine learning because the system is set up so that achieving good results on exams determines the student's success.

Response example 2:

I find that Sophia has given a very lucid perspective on the topic; however, I’ve had a lot of conversations with my peers and schoolmates over the pandemic, and I found that the majority of them were having major difficulties with online school.

Since they are not accustomed to learning independently, they find themselves procrastinating or overwhelmed by the new change in learning. The most evident negative impact of online school that I’ve witnessed, at least with the people that I’ve talked to, is the isolation and the negative feelings of loneliness that arise after being alone for a while.
