Post-pandemic challenges (decreased community college enrollments, the great resignation, and shifts in student demographics) have led to significant workforce shortages affecting many allied health professions. How can accreditors support their program communities in providing innovative solutions to staff shortages while maintaining the accredited education process?
 Committees on Accreditation are responsible for implementing the accreditation process with programs in their professions following core elements of the CAAHEP accreditation process. We will discuss the similarities and differences in CoA review processes and examine what CAAHEP can do to improve consistency.
