Transactional Analysis in Counselling

Cultural Exchange and Supervision Days

Four times on Saturdays across 2021

Online via Zoom

Why

Transactional Analysis is a humanistic psychology that roots in western culture. In this supervision our goal is to develop ways together, in which TA can be applied to Counselling in Japan. Participants will develop the ability to adapt TA concepts to their cultural and working context aiming to support their clients on their way to a healthy coping mechanism regarding their challenges of their personal and professional life's.

Who

You are working as a counsellor in Japan. You have the experience of at least 100 hours of TA training. You are curious to learn and discuss TA models in the context of counselling. You wish to be part of a group that explores ways to utilize TA within your cultural context. This group will consist of four TA students.

What

Together we will create a safe learning space in an atmosphere of productive curiosity. The structure of each session will include an input and discussion about one TA concept and one or two supervision sessions for participants who are bringing a view topics about their counselling practise.

The curriculum will be scheduled as soon as four group members are being found, as each participant will be invited to vote for one TA concept that is of interest to them.

How

This co-creative approach might already be a challenge to the Japanese culture and could be a good source of discussion within the first workshop. We will be working in Japanese translating to English.
