According to the theory, disruption begins when new organizations target these customers away from the established organization, disruption has occurred. One new organizations improve their products over time. When they begin to draw attention, a breadth of curricular and co-curricular activities and ample facilities, established organizations, when threatened, often provide their typical products or services as a defense against the disruptions. Disruption at our Doors?

Michael Arjona, The Walker School, GA

Consequences of Teachers' Stereotypical Biases

Study cited in the article:

Required Reading

Michael Arjona, The Walker School, GA

Unconscionably Unconscious

Christopher Lauricella, The Park School of Buffalo, NY

Broken Patterns, Broken Thresholds

Eric Temple, Lick Wilmerding High School, CA

Rosin dips her toe into the various theories that swirl around teen suicide. The piece is well written and compelling, and perhaps most important for independent school audiences, it speaks about the unanswerable questions and the current challenges that independent schools face.

Required Reading

Hanna Rosin

The Silicon Valley Suicides

October 19, 2015

The New Yorker

Relentless

Rosin explores the extremely rare repeat of what is called a suicide cluster. There are no answers in the article about why some high school students are more susceptible to this kind of event, but Rosin’s reporting is thorough and her examination of the subject matter is rigorous.

Required Reading

Hanna Rosin

The Atlantic

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

November, 2015

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

Stevenson's organization is making strides in Alabama in acknowledging injustices that we face in 2015. Because we often have created a counter-narrative glossing over or overtly omitting the suffering and systemic mistreatment of African American people, we are unable to understand our history.

Required Reading

Eric Temple, Lick Wilmerding High School, CA

Any road map, but the article is an excellent catalyst for discussion in our schools about student health and well-being.

Required Reading

Sarah Rose "Relentlessly" Rosin

New York Times

The Atlantic

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

December 2015

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

Emailed to Michael Arjona, The Walker School, GA

Michael Arjona, The Walker School, GA

Consequences of Teachers' Stereotypical Biases

Study cited in the article:

Required Reading

Michael Arjona, The Walker School, GA

Unconscionably Unconscious

Christopher Lauricella, The Park School of Buffalo, NY

Broken Patterns, Broken Thresholds

Eric Temple, Lick Wilmerding High School, CA

Rosin dips her toe into the various theories that swirl around teen suicide. The piece is well written and compelling, and perhaps most important for independent school audiences, it speaks about the unanswerable questions and the current challenges that independent schools face.

Required Reading

Hanna Rosin

The Silicon Valley Suicides

October 19, 2015

The New Yorker

Relentless

Rosin explores the extremely rare repeat of what is called a suicide cluster. There are no answers in the article about why some high school students are more susceptible to this kind of event, but Rosin’s reporting is thorough and her examination of the subject matter is rigorous.

Required Reading

Hanna Rosin

The Atlantic

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

November, 2015

The 2015 Gift Guide for Raising Your Family’s EQ

Stevenson's organization is making strides in Alabama in acknowledging injustices that we face in 2015. Because we often have created a counter-narrative glossing over or overtly omitting the suffering and systemic mistreatment of African American people, we are unable to understand our history.

Required Reading

Eric Temple, Lick Wilmerding High School, CA

Any road map, but the article is an excellent catalyst for discussion in our schools about student health and well-being.

Required Reading

Sarah Rose "Relentlessly" Rosin

New York Times