Holocaust distortion is on the rise. What can policy and decision makers do?

The Recommendations on Recognizing and Countering Holocaust Distortion, published in cooperation with UNESCO, are the first comprehensive guide for policy and decision makers on combating Holocaust distortion. Policy and decision makers are essential partners in raising awareness of distortion and advancing better ways to identify and respond to this threat.

The Recommendations, which provide a clear action plan for stakeholders, are the product of dialogue and cooperation between international subject matter experts and policymakers.

Backed by research and informed by good practice, the Recommendations:

— Outline guidance for policymakers on how to strengthen monitoring and reporting efforts

— Offer advice on developing training programs for civil servants, police and the judiciary

— Examine how social media can fuel distortion and provide compelling reasons for tackling the issue online

— Include recommendations for strengthening the work of Holocaust-related memorials and museums and spotlight the important role these institutions can play in countering distortive narratives

— Inform national strategies against antisemitism and related issues

Who are these for?

— Policymakers
— Government officials
— Media
— Social media representatives
— Civil society partners
— Law enforcement
— Judiciary
