Strategic Resume

Resume - Our 3-Step Process

Step 1 - Initial Client Consultation and Resume Needs Assessment

Consult with you to identify your targeted profession/industry and career objective(s)

Identify the skills and knowledge you have acquired through your education, including activities, leadership-volunteer work, accomplishments and attributes

Evaluate the position(s) you are applying for including related job postings and employer job competency requirements (skills, experience, qualifications and attributes required to perform the job successfully)

Step 2 - Resume Strategy and Development

Identify and minimize any weakness in your resume

Edit and enhance the contents of your resume to better reflect your academic skills and knowledge, job duties, achievements and personal attributes using job specific key words and competency-based phrases

Review the initial draft to ensure that your resume effectively links your academic skills and knowledge, work experience and attributes to your targeted profession and/or employers' job competency requirements

Step 3 - Client Consultation and Resume Review

Review the resume one-on-one with you to ensure that the resume successfully targets your objectives and desires

Ensure that the resume accurately portrays your academic/work experience and effectively demonstrates how your academic skills and experience can benefit prospective employers

Make any changes to meet your needs and prepare the final resume for your approval
Discuss how you can utilize your new resume to effectively sell yourself at the interview and get the job

The Benefits of Job Seeking Letters

Letters are an excellent vehicle to remotely speak to and convey a positive impression to a potential employer. Whether it is through a cover letter, a thank you letter or an inquiry/informational request letter, these tools are highly effective.

The cover letter provides the opportunity for you to link your specific skills, experience, and accomplishments to the competency requirements of the industry and/or job you are applying for, and at the same time, it enables you to demonstrate what tangible value you can bring to the employer. Together with your resume, a cover letter creates opportunities for you to get interviews, and subsequently hired.

Reference Page/List

Reference List

Lists of references serve as a source of contact through which a potential employer can verify your background and help to ascertain your suitability for a job. This document allows you the opportunity to provide a list of persons who can vouch for your skills, work ethics, character, strengths and other attributes.

The list of references should contain the name, job title, and company employing your reference as well as a contact number. It may also be useful to indicate how you were associated with your reference. For example: supervisor, business partner or client.

Note:

Be sure to choose your references carefully, seek their permission, and provide them with an overview of the areas you would like them to emphasize on your behalf. It may be a good idea to provide your references with scripted summaries highlighting key areas relevant to your employment objectives. If you are seeking a management position, areas such as leadership, work planning and decision-making should be included in your summary.

One to Three References $15.00 Four to Six references $25.00

Admissions Applications

Purpose:

Due to the large volume of candidates seeking higher education, many colleges, universities and professional schools require that you apply formally. The format sought by these institutions is often referred to as an autobiographical sketch, profile or admission application. While the format and areas of focus may vary, the purpose is usually similar. These institutions aim to secure the best candidates for admission to their programs. The decision to accept a candidate is often based on the candidate's ability to complete the program, potential for success upon graduation, and their possible contribution to the learning process and to society as a whole.

Method:

Similar to our resume writing process, the admission application starts with an assessment of your background in order to obtain pertinent information. Research is also conducted to obtain information about the institution to which you are applying and the focus of their programs. Armed with such knowledge, we will then develop the strategy and content required to meet the criteria of the institution. We will incorporate aspects of your background to solidify the uniqueness and strength of your submission and give you an advantageous position over competing candidates.

Our Fees

Our fee to prepare admissions applications is $295.00 and up.

Speeches

Purpose:

Speeches are widely used at social, political and corporate events. Executives, politicians and other organizational leaders find speeches to be an integral aspect of their life. Speeches are an effective method of demonstrating leadership, influencing others and motivating a team.

Method:

In writing speeches, the rules of written English should be modified to facilitate spoken English. The theme and content should be composed to reflect the occasion, audience, purpose, time and style of the person delivering the speech. When writing a speech, short and focused sentences should be used and the number of ideas minimized or aligned to ensure effectiveness of delivery and audience appeal.

Our Fees

Our fee to prepare your speech is $95.00 and up.
