Section 1: Course Access. In order to access the TED Courses, You need to pay the applicable license fee, and create a TED.com account to obtain a TED User ID, which may be obtained at https://auth.ted.com/users/new. At sign up, it is required to provide accurate and complete information about yourself as prompted by the registration site. TED will confirm your enrollment via email and will send You a link to join the TED Courses on its start date. All TED Course users ("User(s)") will be invited to take the TED Courses with other Users for a community type learning session taking place through our third party provider, Mighty Networks. More information about this is included in the documentation provided with the TED Courses. Each course will include video and/or audio teaching segments, reflection prompts, individual activities, community discussion questions, and optional extension resources curated from TED and third parties. While not required, TED recommends that Users complete all portions of the TED Course including video and audio segments, TED Course activities and participate in the community discussions. The community type learning session will be a timed session which corresponds to the dates defined for each TED Course. At the end of the TED Course community session, the session will end and the TED Courses will continue via self-guided materials which are downloadable for Your review. You will also be invited to continue the discussions with the alumni Users through another section of the community site.

To access TED Courses, sign up to TED.com and then follow instructions via email to join the TED Course community via our platform. These community sessions offer Users a unique opportunity to participate in the learning experience with others and are time-based (usually 6 weeks from the published start date). Once the community session closes, Users will be provided access to the TED Course for self-guided learning and archived content.
Section 2: License.
