

Mental Health Benefits that work

How Health Catalyst employees get care how and when they need it.

40% of American adults suffer symptoms of mental illness¹. Research by Tava partners shows that each employee with an untreated mental health condition can cost an employer over $20,000 in medical and disability claims.

Despite the great need for mental health care, traditional mental health care benefits tend to be difficult or impossible to access. Long wait lists, travel time, and high costs all impede care.

Health Catalyst's search for a solution

The People Operations team at Health Catalyst recognized that mental health-related risks posed potential challenges that were not being fully addressed by existing benefits programs.

“Team members consistently told us that care through our traditional medical benefit was lacking.”

Becky Veal, Senior Vice President of People Operations at Health Catalyst, shared how the company's mental health benefit at the time presented team members with some challenges: “Team members consistently told us that care through our traditional medical benefit was lacking. Wait times were long, weeks even months, for initial visits. There was a general lack of providers, especially in more remote locations or within certain specialties. Additionally, some team members struggled to find care for their dependents under the age of 18.”

Effectively offering care with Tava

Tava's intuitive platform, robust clinical network, and utilization-based pricing gave Health Catalyst confidence that Tava would provide the comprehensive and beneficial mental health service needed by Health Catalyst team members. Veal explained, “Tava's platform is easy to use and conforms well to everyone's schedule. Tava can treat a variety of conditions, including those that require medium to long-term care; and we were happy to be able to offer a solution that also would treat our team members' dependents.”

“Tava is a true partner.”

“Tava is a true partner,” Vea said. “If we need advice on how to handle a particular issue at work or ideas to increase engagement, they actively participate and contribute, helping us find a solution. Tava’s team provides everything from one-on-one management coaching to leading customized webinars. They are aware of our unique culture and needs. Because of this we feel confident when issues arise, they are able and willing to support us in addressing the problems quickly.”
