Wonder Showzen is an adult puppet comedy series that aired on MTV2 from 2005 to 2006. Created by Vernon Chatman and John Lee, the show parodies children's educational TV programs like Sesame Street. It uses satire, black humor, and surreal elements to tackle topics such as politics, sex, war, and culture. Despite its adult themes, Wonder Showzen was pitched as a kids' show to appeal to MTV2's audience. The series features puppetry, stock footage, and animated segments from Augenblick Studios. After being rejected by the USA Network in 2000, Wonder Showzen became part of MTV2's new lineup, airing alongside other shows like Dirty Sanchez and Wildboyz. Reruns aired on MTV and Comedy Central, and the first season was released on DVD in March 2006. The second season premiered in March 2006 and concluded with its finale in May 2006, also releasing on DVD in October of that year. With an Easter egg featuring an animation contest, the grand prize was announced as the winner's animation appearing on "the next DVD". However, it was later stated that a third season was unlikely and MTV eventually canceled the show. The voice cast included Vernon Chatman, John Lee, Alyson Levy, Jim Tozzi, Benjamin Krueger, and Evan Seligman, among others. Notable guest stars included Jon Glaser as Mr. Story, Flavor Flav as himself, Dick Gregory as Mr. Sun, Amy Sedaris as Miss Amy, Christopher Meloni as the Chewties Spokesman, and David Cross in various roles throughout the series. The show also featured various recurring segments such as Beat Kids, What's Jim Drawing?, Horse Apples, Funny/Not Funny, So Now You Know, Q&A, Breaking News, and more. These segments were often humorous or absurd, adding to the show's offbeat charm. Kids Show A children's television program that often tackles mature themes and presents them in an unconventional way, featuring a mix of news reporting, puppet interviews, and humorous sketches. The series follows Chauncey's misadventures as he navigates through various surreal and often disturbing scenarios, blending dark humor with poignant social commentary. His journey is filled with sketches that tackle complex themes like faith, morality, and the human condition. These sketches frequently feature characters like Clarence and Tyler, who embody opposing viewpoints on sensitive topics. The show's narrative often veers into absurd territory, featuring events such as God committing suicide after losing a game of rock-paper-scissors to Chauncey, or nature undergoing a sex change operation that leads to unforeseen consequences. Through these sketches, the series critiques societal norms and challenges its viewers' perceptions on issues like faith, morality, and what it means to be human. The show features various sketches and segments, often with dark humor and satire. In one episode, Chauncey is surprised to see "2" instead of his expected guest "1", leading to a series of events that end with Chauncey reducing her to a mere number "0". In another episode, the puppet Wordsworth gives a lecture on honesty, but Chauncey interrupts him and causes Wordsworth to be diagnosed with cooties. Wordsworth eventually realizes the error of his ways and becomes honest again. The final episode is about patience, featuring a sketch where Clarence interviews people on the street about the topic. However, the broadcast is interrupted by an apology for the slow pace of the show, followed by an announcement that the remaining time will be dedicated to speed. The rest of the episode features sketches played in reverse and sped up. Some recurring segments include: * Breaking News: A series of absurd news reports. * Clarence: A puppet who interviews people on the street about various topics. * Beat Kids: Puppets performing silly songs and dances. * Bible Brew: A cartoon featuring a biblical theme. * Cooties PSA: Public Service Announcements about cooties, which Wordsworth eventually finds delicious. Other sketches include: * Q&A: Chauncey answering questions from viewers. * Rad Mark Sez: A segment where Punk Mark gives advice on various topics. * Kooky McZanybottom's Kartoon Korner: A recurring cartoon segment featuring the titular character. Punk rock band "The Living Toilet" has released a new album featuring some of its most popular songs. The album includes tracks like "So Now You Know (Life as a Girl)", "Beat Kids (Muscles vs. Brains)", and "Pre-School Race War". Some fans have criticized the song for being insensitive, but others praise it for tackling tough topics like body image and social class. The band's lead singer, P, has been making headlines lately for her weight loss journey. In a recent episode of their TV show, she got liposuction and had her excess fat removed. However, some fans have expressed concern about the impact of this decision on her mental health. In another episode, Chauncey, the show's host, used a time machine to travel back in time and meet his younger self. The two of them battled through time, eventually returning to the present with no clear winner. Some viewers found this plot twist confusing, while others appreciated its creative take on the concept of time travel. The album also features tracks like "Q&A (What is Patience?)" and "Double Speed Double Dutch", which have been praised for their catchy hooks and memorable melodies. However, some critics argue that the lyrics are shallow and lack depth. Overall, opinions about the album vary widely, with some fans praising its energy and creativity while others criticize it for being too light-hearted or insensitive. The show "Wonder Showzen" takes place in a surreal world where puppets navigate complex themes like history, science, and social issues. Chauncey, the main character, uses manipulation and coercion to maintain control, while his friends Wordsworth and Him often get caught up in his schemes. In one episode, Chauncey's plan to make "Horse Apples," a comedy show that ridicules Southern stereotypes, becomes a huge success and makes him rich. However, when he tries to cut Chauncey out of the deal, Chauncey seeks revenge by sabotaging the hot air balloon that takes him away. In another episode, Wordsworth invents a device that allows people to see into dreams, unleashing his own repressed anger on the world. His friends intervene and take control of his body, forcing him to confront his anger and ultimately leading to his revival through the power of imagination. Throughout the series, the puppets tackle various topics like the importance of education, the dangers of peer pressure, and the value of empathy. Sketches within the episodes include parodies of societal norms, music performances, and animations that reflect the show's unique brand of satire and social commentary. Bootleg Clarence tries to do his segment in Clarence's spot, leading to a war between the bootlegs and the two shows. The Sthugars intervene and convince them to split the screen and air their shows simultaneously. A third bootleg show joins, and all three air cartoons at once, including one where a terminally ill girl requests a nuclear apocalypse. Sketches include "What Dumb?," "Steal Back," "Hit Children," and more. The episode "We Went to the Apocalypse" features Horse Apples instead of Wonder Showzen. In another episode, Clarence runs a report on "compelling television" by asking people to create quality content. After getting varied reactions, Clarence concludes that compelling TV doesn't exist and commits suicide. Wonder Showzen has received praise from Matt Groening, creator of The Simpsons and Futurama; Cartoon Network's Adult Swim; Eric André; TV Guide; and The New York Times.
