Click to verify

Given text here Scarlett Bordeaux's rise to fame extends beyond her wrestling career. Since her release from WWE, she has successfully transitioned into a content creator, leveraging platforms like OnlyFans to monetize her personal brand. Her OnlyFans account has garnered significant attention, with her becoming the top .04% of all creators on the platform. Bordeaux's popularity can be attributed to her captivating persona, which combines beauty and fierceness. As she navigates this new venture, fans eagerly await her next move. With her fiancé, Karrion Kross, both Scarlett and Kross are now free to pursue their passions without the constraints of their WWE contract. Their engagement announcement in September has generated widespread excitement among fans. While it remains to be seen whether Bordeaux can sustain her success on OnlyFans, her current trajectory suggests a promising future. Scarlett's ring name is not her birth name; it's actually Elizabeth Chihaia. She adopted this name due to the wrestling world already having the popular Miss Elizabeth. Scarlett received her college degree from Columbia College, which helped her entrance with Karrion Kross in NXT. The 5'5" wrestler has lent her voice to Karrion Kross' 'Fall and Prey' theme song and made her wrestling debut in 2012. Scarlett Bordeaux debuted at Payback 2014 as Adam Rose's Rosebud. She was defeated by Nia Jax on RAW in 2016. Bordeaux signed with WWE in 2019 and began working on NXT, but had previous appearances prior to joining the show. Scarlett rose through the ranks under several mentors, including Bull Nakano, Maryse, Gail Kim, and even idolized wrestlers like them as a child. She has a strong connection with wrestling legend Gail Kim's career in Impact Wrestling. Many wrestlers have been inspired by their idols to pursue a career in the ring. Scarlett began dating Karrion Kross before joining WWE and is now his valet. Scarlett Bordeaux Announces Closing of Custom Requests Due to Overwhelming Response Scarlett notes that she has shut down her custom requests due to the overwhelming response. "I got a MASSIVE outpour for custom requests, and I will be closing them until I've been able to respond and look at all of them!" she writes. She thanks fans for their patience and mentions that she'll also be getting a list of clothing together soon. Professional wrestlers are turning to subscription-based platforms like OnlyFans to monetize their exclusive content for a monthly fee. This shift enables them to connect directly with fans and diversify their income streams. Among those utilizing this platform is Chelsea Green, the WWE women's tag team champion, who initially opened her account after being laid off from WWE due to budget cuts. Although she has since been re-signed by WWE, her OnlyFans content remains available for a $5 monthly fee. Another prominent wrestler leveraging OnlyFans is Mandy Rose, who had previously earned up to $1 million per month through the platform before returning to WWE in 2023. Following her initial termination from WWE due to concerns over adult-themed online content, Rose's online presence surged in popularity. Zelina Vega, a WWE wrestler and member of the Latino World Order faction, is also using OnlyFans as an additional revenue stream, charging $30 per month for exclusive content. The platform provides an opportunity for wrestlers to adapt their professional presence and cater to diverse fan interests. These examples demonstrate how various professional wrestlers are embracing the subscription model on platforms like OnlyFans to engage with fans and supplement their income. Megan the Minx's WWE History, Scarlett Bordeaux and Toni Storm's OnlyFans Megan the Minx was fired by WWE due to using third-party apps while still employed by the company. She rejoined in July 2021 and has been part of WWE since then. Scarlett Bordeaux is an American model, singer, and wrestler known for her work with WWE from 2019 to 2021. After being released, she launched her OnlyFans account with a $20 monthly subscription. Toni Storm is a New Zealand professional wrestler who competed in NXT and on the main roster. She gained attention for her time in WWE but was let go due to COVID-19 budget cuts. Toni Storm opened her OnlyFans account after release. Her monthly fee is $19.99. Paige Vanzant, aka Paige, is an American wrestler with a $9.99 monthly subscription on OnlyFans. Paige competed in the Mixed Martial Arts (MMA) for six years before launching her own account. Cheerleader Melissa is a professional wrestler and model from America. She launched her OnlyFans account with a $12.95 monthly fee. Melissa has the most fans on her OnlyFans account among WWE wrestlers. She charges $12.95 monthly for exclusive content. Allysin Kay, also known as Sienna, is another popular female wrestler with an OnlyFans account. Her pricing varies between $19.99 monthly and discounted quarterly or annual subscriptions. The emergence of wrestlers with OnlyFans accounts signifies a new way celebrities interact with fans, offering them exclusive content and behind-the-scenes insights. Some notable WWE talents have expressed interest in joining the platform. Scarlett Bordeaux has already landed a magazine cover and is discussing potential clothing lines. She also hinted at setting up her own OnlyFans account, sparking fan curiosity. Bordeaux's rise to fame follows her signing with WWE in November 2019 and competing for promotions like Ring of Honor and IMPACT Wrestling. Wrestlers' OnlyFans accounts reflect the evolving relationship between celebrities and their fans. These platforms provide unique opportunities for connection and exclusive content. You can freely share and reuse this content in any way, including for commercial purposes, without asking permission from the original author. You also have the right to adapt and build upon the content as long as you give credit where it's due and follow certain guidelines.