The western Montana back road had been treacherous in the rain, but finally, she'd arrived at the safe haven Lauryn Hamilton had offered her. Cass had been driving for 12 hours from St. Paul, Minnesota, and was grateful for the quick refuge from her past. Lauryn's voice came through the phone, reassuring Cass to stay on the line until she was inside the house. Their friendship dated back to their childhood days in the foster system, and Lauryn had been the first person Cass thought of when she needed to escape Minnesota for a few months. The memory of her last heartbreak still lingered, but she hoped this new beginning would be different. As Cass stepped out of the minivan, the massive log house came into view, illuminated by landscape lights despite the rain and darkness. "Not big enough for you?" Lauryn joked over the phone. Cass smiled, telling herself it was fine, but couldn't shake off the feeling that this place might hold some unexpected surprises for her. John Christos watched as everyone in the room focused on the TV screen where CNN anchor Abby Phillip discussed the recent debate between mayoral candidate Lennox Carlisle and his opponent. John glanced at his candidate, who was seated on the sofa with his wife, Amara Devereaux-Smith. He could read the tension in their bodies, but he shifted uncomfortably, leaning comfortably as if this were just another visit to Lennox's house. Why? Because he knew beyond a shadow of a doubt that Lennox would be the next mayor of New York City for three reasons: his exceptional campaign skills, Amara's powerful campaigning, and John's guarantee that he'd win. As a renowned campaign manager, John had brought in significant business for Landry & Adams PR Firm, making him eligible for a named partner position. This campaign was just icing on his professional cake. John smiled at Abby's astute summary of the debate, then started counting slowly in his head. The angst wore off, and the room erupted into cheers as Lennox celebrated getting closer to his goal. After several moments, Lennox freed himself from John's congratulations and pulled him into a tight bear hug. "Thank you, man," Lennox half-laughed, half-cried. "I couldn't have done this without you." John smiled, shaking Lennox's hand firmly. Get cozy this holiday season with "Secret Heir for Christmas" by LaQuette.
