Where is a good girl's guide filmed

The Netflix series A Good Girl's Guide to Murder is based on the book by Holly Jackson and follows the story of Pip Fitz-Amobi as she reinvestigates a 5-year-old murder in the town of Little Kilton, England. The show uses a combination of filming locations, including Axbridge, Bristol, South Gloucestershire, and Bath, to bring the quintessential English town to life. The production team chose these locations to create a sleepy town that matches the story's needs, with a size that allows for a reasonable number of suspects. The town of Little Kilton was invented for the UK version of the book, and its setting differs from the US version, which is set in Fairview, Connecticut. The show's use of multiple filming locations helps to create a sense of paranoia and social fear, highlighting the contrast between the town's idyllic appearance and the dark crimes that occur there. Axbridge, Somerset, was used for many of the exterior shots, including the town square and the Church of St. John the Baptist, which features in several key scenes. The surrounding landscape of Axbridge, with its woods, countryside, and River Axe, adds to the show's dreamy and idyllic mood, while also providing a sense of unease and tension. By using a combination of filming locations, the show's production team was able to create a unique and captivating setting that brings the story to life and sets the tone for the "small-town crime" mystery genre. The fictional town of Little Kilton in A Good Girl's Guide to Murder features several specific locations that play a crucial role in the story. One such location is Fairview High School, which was filmed at Redmaids' High School in Westbury-on-Trym. This setting is significant as it's where the murder took place when Andie and Sal were in high school, and Pip is investigating as her EPQ. The series also uses Bristol locations like the Redcliffe Caves, which adds an air of mystery and darkness to the parties, and man-made underground tunnels with a history as World War II air raid shelters, adding unease to the scenes. Other notable locations include Costcutter Convenience Store, Hillgrove Porter Stores, Wilson's Bread Shop, and Berwick Lodge, which double for various businesses and hotels in Little Kilton. The production team chose this approach to avoid being tied to the specific layouts of the fictional town of Little Kilton and its surroundings. The show is based on Holly Jackson's bestselling novel and follows the story of Pip Fitz-Amobi as she investigates the mysterious death of schoolgirl Andie Bell five years earlier. As Pip digs deeper, she faces obstacles from those who want to keep the truth hidden. Filming locations included iconic spots such as Redcliffe Caves, Avon Valley Railway, and Westbury on Trym in Bristol. These locations provided a unique backdrop for key scenes, adding an air of mystery to the narrative. The use of these different settings enhances the viewing experience, drawing viewers into Pip's investigative journey. The historic Redcliffe Caves, picturesque Avon Valley Railway, and charming Westbury on Trym all contribute to the show's atmosphere. The production wrapped up in August 2023, marking the completion of this intense mystery thriller produced by Moonage Pictures for BBC Three and set to premiere in July 2024 in the UK and later in the US. Given article text here The atmospheric backdrop of “A Good Girl’s Guide to Murder” was expertly crafted by its various locations, including Caves, Avon Valley Railway, and Westbury on Trym. The series began filming in June 2023 and concluded in August 2023, with the cast and crew working across different locations in Bristol to bring the story to life. The show was released on July 1, 2024, on BBC iPlayer in the UK, and Netflix has announced plans to release it for streaming in the US later in the same year. The first season covers events from the first book of Holly Jackson’s trilogy and is designed to have a conclusive ending, according to executive producer Frith Tiplady. The series was filmed on location in South West England, with assistance from local film offices and companies such as Moonage Pictures and ZDFneo. The production team made use of various locations, including Redcliffe Caves, Avon Valley Railway Park, and Axbridge village, which served as the key location for the fictional town of Little Kilton. Moonage Pictures, based in London, has a history of producing high-end TV drama in the West Country, having previously filmed BBC drama “The Pursuit of Love” at The Bottle Yard Studios and on location in Bristol and Bath. For “A Good Girl’s Guide to Murder”, all production offices, costumes, props, and storage were based at The Bottle Yard Studios, while filming took place on location. Five years ago, schoolgirl Andie Bell was brutally murdered by her boyfriend Sal Singh, but smart and determined detective Pip Fitz-Amobi isn't convinced of his guilt. As she delves deeper into the case, she uncovers secrets that lead her to question the police's conclusion. With a strong cast led by Emma Myers as Pip and newcomer Zain Iqbal as Ravi, this gripping mystery thriller is an adaptation of Holly Jackson's bestselling novels. The series is directed by Dolly Wells and produced by Moonage Pictures, with BBC Studios handling international distribution. Caroline Stone, Commercial Director of Scripted at BBC Studios, praises Holly Jackson's novel for its global impact, saying: "The world-class casting for this adaptation shows the impressive skills and ambition of Poppy Cogan and Moonage Pictures to make an unmissable series." A Good Girl's Guide To Murder is a 6-part series written by Poppy Cogan alongside other writers. The show follows Pip as she investigates Andie's murder, with doubts about her boyfriend Sal's guilt. Filming took place in Axbridge, Somerset, which doubles as the fictional town of Little Kilton. The cast and crew aimed to recreate the atmosphere in the book and screenplay by filming on location during the summer. Zain Iqbal, who plays Ravi and Pip's co-detective, praised the transformation of Axbridge into Little Kilton: "It was incredible how they changed the town... put up a full mural [of Andie]." Director Dolly Wells described Little Kilton as a "chocolate box village", essential for the show's aesthetic and tone. The town's mysterious atmosphere is said to make it an interesting setting for a drama. The series follows Pip as she uncovers secrets in the small community of Little Kilton, where everyone knows each other's business. Executive producers include Matthew Read, Matthew Bouch, Frith Tiplady, Lucy Richer, Danielle Scott-Haughton, and others. BBC Studios will handle international distribution of the series. But it has an edge. Screenwriter Poppy Cogan praised Wells's "amazing eye", saying she created a world that feels quintessentially English with a twist - a picture-perfect town with a dark underbelly. All episodes of A Good Girl's Guide To Murder will be available on BBC iPlayer on July 1 and air on BBC Three later in the month. Dolly Wells and Emma Myers Describe Choosing Axbridge as the Perfect Location for 'A Good Girl's Guide to Murder' The production team of 'A Good Girl's Guide to Murder' scouted locations across England before settling on the town of Axbridge in Somerset to stand in for the show's fictional setting, Little Kilton. The director and executive producer Dolly Wells expressed her desire to shoot the show on location and during the summer to capture the atmosphere from the book and screenplay. The crew was drawn to Axbridge because it offered a sense of woods surrounding the town, which was thematically important to the story. Emma Myers, who plays Pip Fitz-Amobi, praised the town's unique blend of bright colors and woody hills, saying it felt "very British but has an edge." Zain Igbal, who portrays Ravi, was equally impressed with the transformation of Axbridge into Little Kilton. The show also filmed in Bristol, where they utilized the Redmaids' High School campus for school scenes. The neighborhood of Redland and the Redcliffe Caves on Phoenix Wharf were used as prominent filming locations. Meanwhile, The Bottle Yard Studios served as the home base for the crew, offering state-of-the-art facilities, including 11 sound stages and 35,000 square feet of production offices. Executive Producer Frith Tiplady noted that The Bottle Yard's location allowed them to easily access rural landscapes needed for the show's chocolate box village and brooding woodland. With its talented local crews and excellent facilities, Bristol proved to be an ideal home for 'A Good Girl's Guide to Murder'.
