Adrian Mellon and his boyfriend suffer a brutal assault by homophobic teens after which Mike Hanlon summons the other members of the Losers Club. Stanley Uris, however, takes his own life before the group can reunite with him. The group returns to Derry despite their reservations, led by Beverly Marsh who shares visions of their impending doom if they fail to fulfill their oath to kill It. Meanwhile, It claims another victim at a baseball game and helps Henry Bowers escape from mental institution. Mike shares an ancient Native American ritual, the "Ritual of Chüd", with Bill Denbrough via a hallucinatory vision, promising it can defeat It using past artifacts. The group reunites, but tensions rise as each member struggles to overcome their fears. Beverly confronts her own demons when attacked by an elderly demon at the library, while Richie discovers his hidden homosexuality and is forced to confront Pennywise in an abandoned cinema. Ben returns to high school, relying on a year-old yearbook signed by Beverly for strength, whereas Eddie recovers from an attack by a leper. As the Losers prepare for their final confrontation, tensions rise and members abandon the group or succumb to It's attacks. With Mike's guidance, they eventually reunite at the Neibolt house and perform the "Ritual of Chüd". However, the ritual fails as It emerges in a monstrous form, forcing Bill, Ben, and Beverly into hallucinations. They escape when Bill lets go of his guilt over Georgie's death, while Beverly realizes her long-lost love letter was actually written by Ben. When Eddie is killed, the Losers discover how he had previously humiliated a leper to make It feel small. Confronting their fears and overcoming them causes It to shrink, allowing Mike to rip out Its heart, which they crush with their bare hands. The Losers then bid farewell to Eddie, who has died from his injuries, as the Neibolt House implodes. They comfort Richie at a water-logged quarry, and later Ben and Beverly share a kiss. Their scars eventually heal, leading to a happier ending as Ben and Beverly get married and Richie reunites with Bill on the kissing bridge.
