We are forsaken on a hostile world, our wealth squandered by the petty squabbles of our Senate. I have heard it said that we should abandon our brave sons and daughters, our Free Legions, who have fought for us with courage and endurance. They are called "the Lost Legions" behind our backs, written off despite their sacrifices. We fear to lose our ships, fearing an invasion, and are too afraid to part with the comforts and freedoms we took from them. I fear that time has watered down our dream, that our meek resolve will rob us of unity, plunging us into darkness. I call upon you, the People of the Republic, to stand united against this threat. Reject fear and self-interest, don't let your senators hoard wealth and hide behind ships of war. Summon the might of the Republic to scourge tyranny and oppression from Mercury's skies and rescue our Free Legions. My husband is fighting for us, ferrying supplies and hope to those in need. We were betrayed by our allies and deceived by our own fears. The Republic Senate thought it could broker peace with fascist warlords, but I knew better. I believed that defeating the Ash Lord would bring an end to war. My desperation clouded my judgment, and I convinced myself that I was the key to a brighter future. But Sevro, who once shared my conviction, now fears our enemy's wrath. As I venture deeper into the ravaged fleet, I see the remnants of what we lost. The hull is scarred, the decks littered with debris and the mangled bodies of those who fell in battle. My thoughts are consumed by regret and uncertainty. How many more will have to bleed before our enemy yields? My comrade Alexandar approaches me, his eyes hardened by the horrors he has witnessed. He was once a young, idealistic soldier, but now he is driven by a burning desire for revenge against those who destroyed our fleet. I worry that this same hunger may consume him, and that I have passed on a burden too great to bear. We are all haunted by our own demons, and the weight of war crushes us. It's a cruel fate that forces us to confront the darkness within ourselves. Some retreat in shame, while others revel in their newfound malevolence. But for those of us who remain, there is only one question: what price must we pay for our revenge? The eastern edge of Mercury is ablaze with an otherworldly energy, like a scorching blade about to strike. The fifth installment in the Red Rising Saga has arrived, penned by the same author who brought you Morning Star. This latest novel promises to be just as electrifying, as it delves into the aftermath of Iron Gold's explosive events. Darrow, once the hero who shattered the chains of oppression, now finds himself on the run from his own creation, waging a guerrilla war against the Republic he helped found. His fleet lies in tatters, and the odds are stacked against him. Can he still be seen as the champion who brought freedom to the masses, or will his actions ultimately lead to catastrophe? Meanwhile, Lysander au Lune, a man from a bygone era, has returned to the Core with intentions of claiming what's rightfully his. However, the path ahead is fraught with danger, as he must navigate treacherous alliances and confrontations with Darrow himself. On Luna, Mustang faces an uphill battle to save both her people and her exiled husband from the brink of destruction. Amidst this chaos, one truth stands clear: in a Solar System teeming with intrigue and deception, only the strongest will survive. The Red Rising Saga continues to captivate audiences with its sweeping narrative, likened by critics to the works of Ender, Katniss, and Darrow himself.
