Former adult film star Lana Rhoades is speaking out against the industry that catapulted her to fame. The 26-year-old brunette, who worked in the field for just eight months between 2016 and 2017, claims it's "not good for anyone" and should be made illegal. She expressed these sentiments during an interview on the podcast "The Skinny Confidential Him & Her". Rhoades' involvement with the industry began when she was just 19 years old, and she has since spoken about her naivety regarding what would be expected of her. In fact, she claimed that before entering the adult film world, she had only been intimate with one person. The Illinois native stated that she was initially drawn to the industry after watching a TV series called "The Girls Next Door", which showcased the glamorous lives of Hugh Hefner's girlfriends. This sparked an aspiration for her own life to be more exciting and fulfilling. Despite achieving significant success, including becoming the most-searched porn star on Pornhub with over 345 million views, Rhoades has spoken about her discomfort with "performing" in these films. She described it as akin to being a circus performer, where she was required to present a certain image or make specific sounds to enhance the movie's appeal. Furthermore, Rhoades claimed that the industry is plagued by issues of substance abuse and addiction. The adult film star has since transitioned out of this line of work, focusing instead on her career as a model and fashion designer, which she says allows her to be more true to herself. Lana Rhoades claims that working in the adult industry didn't change her after doing porn. However, she recently revealed a more negative experience involving an NBA star. The unidentified athlete allegedly fathered Rhoades' now-9-month-old son, Milo. Rhoades gained fame as a popular porn star despite only being active in the industry for less than a year. In a recent video, she expressed her disappointment with the NBA player's behavior, stating that he was not nice when she revealed her pregnancy to him. Rhoades has spoken out about her experiences in the adult industry, mentioning that she was taken advantage of during her time as a porn performer. She also expressed a desire for her old videos to be deleted from the internet. Despite her short stint in the industry, Rhoades is still one of the most recognizable names in pornography. Rhoades has revealed that she was fascinated by the adult industry at a young age and even considered it as a career path. However, this decision wasn't without its challenges, as she faced criticism from a school guidance counselor who suggested she needed therapy for her ambitions. Rhoades has also spoken about idolizing celebrities like Anna Nicole Smith and Playboy bunnies, which influenced her decision to enter the industry. In recent years, Rhoades has discussed the darker side of adult content creation, including how she makes more money as a content creator than as a porn actor. She recalled a conversation with an Instagram and YouTube creator who was earning $15,000 from content creation, highlighting the financial disparities between these platforms. Lana Rhoades, a former adult film actress, has spoken out about her decision to leave the industry due to traumatic experiences on set. She claimed that certain scenes made her feel pressured and scared, leading to emotional distress. Rhoades expressed concerns that the adult industry can be detrimental to mental health and overall well-being. She now advocates for banning pornography, citing its negative impact on individuals and society as a whole. Despite her difficult past, Rhoades has pivoted to creating content on social media platforms like OnlyFans, where she shares business ventures and personal projects. Lana Rhoades Opens Up About Her Porn Past and Its Lasting Impact Amara Maple, aka Lana Rhoades, recently discussed her experiences in the adult industry during the second episode of "3 Girls 1 Kitchen." She recalled feeling helpless and crying about her situation, particularly when she was forced to perform scenes that made her uncomfortable. Despite being able to say no to some requests, Rhoades often felt pressured into accepting gigs due to her agent's persuasion. The influencer emphasized that it wasn't the nudity or sex itself that troubled her but the stigma attached to her profession, which followed her for life. Rhoades expressed frustration over the constant association of her current endeavors with her past and questioned whether all she did in the future would be linked to pornography. Rhoades confirmed being part of the industry for only eight months but has since spoken out against its negative effects. She recently confronted a Twitter troll who expected her next "3 Girls 1 Kitchen" content to be explicit, further highlighting her struggles with the aftermath of her past career. Given article text here Lana Rhoades leaked video is going viral on the internet and is expected to be released on Netflix soon. You can watch her latest porn videos for free on Pornhub.com or Eporner.com. The video shows her in an unexpected situation while running errands. It has become a trending topic on Twitter and Reddit after her break-up. Given text here “I have no rights over most of my old videos; if I had to delete them all, I probably would by now,” said Rhoades. She also expressed her regret for losing her dignity and respect during her time as a top performer. In a recent podcast interview, she shared an unsettling experience from her adult film days that left her questioning the industry's worth. The traumatic scene involved being gagged and forced to vomit into a bowl while being urinated on. The incident was particularly distressing for Rhoades because she had been pressured into doing something she didn't want to do. Despite consent, many performers like Eden Alexander have spoken about feeling blindsided by the brutality of the scenes they were forced to participate in. Experts argue that the porn industry exploits and objectifies women, while viewers often assume that if it's consensual, then anything goes. Rhoades, whose real name is Amara Maple, has been open about her struggles with suicidal thoughts stemming from her experiences in the industry. She believes that the consequences of performing in such scenes can be severe and long-lasting. Lana Rhoades shares her experience in the adult entertainment industry, emphasizing that people will love you if you do certain things. She mentions that she doesn't want to let anyone down, which ultimately leads to doing it over time. The former porn star reveals that she struggles with depression and suicidal thoughts on a monthly basis due to her past experiences. Rhoades highlights the significant difference in earnings between her days as a porn actress and her current OnlyFans income. In the industry, she didn't receive substantial payment, whereas she now collects millions through her OnlyFans page. She advises young women to avoid pursuing a career in pornography, instead opting for platforms like Instagram or OnlyFans.
