

Click to verify

Drake seemingly referenced the allegedly leaked X-rated video that shows him engaging in a sex act on his latest Instagram Story. The Canadian rapper has been surrounded by controversy after a video circulating online claimed to show him in an intimate situation, just days after deepfake images of Taylor Swift were shared on social media. According to Kick streamer Adin Ross, Drake responded to the leak with eight laughing emojis, indicating he is unbothered by the attention. Hours later, Drake posted a photo on his Instagram Stories that appeared unrelated at first but could be seen as an allusion to the tape. The photo was taken in the cockpit of his private jet and featured the caption: "Cashville I'm home." Drake's representatives declined comment on the matter. Later, he pranked his fans by asking if they wanted the truth during a show in Nashville, leading to a big reveal. With over 170 million records sold, Drake is one of the best-selling music artists worldwide. The leaked video comes after a scandal involving X-rated deepfake images of Taylor Swift, which were made using AI and showed her in sexually suggestive positions. After amassing over 27 million views and 260,000 likes in 19 hours, the account sharing the images was suspended, and X temporarily blocked searches of Swift's name. Given article text here The rapper, Drake, faced another controversy when private footage of him surfaced on social media platform X. A video allegedly showing Drake naked from the waist down in bed went viral, with some users expressing shock and others making jokes about his physique. The incident is similar to a previous leak that occurred last year, where No Jumper founder Adam22 claimed to have seen a picture of Drake's genitals. Some users on X are referencing these comments, while others expressed skepticism over the authenticity of the leaked video. Despite the controversy, Drake addressed the situation in his recent concert stop, jokingly saying "My dad is here!" to deflect attention from the rumors. Given article text here Ross said.Drake responded to with laughter emojis and joked about using it for his next album intro.Meanwhile, the tour featured pre-recorded sports commentary from Stephen A. Smith and BenDaDonnn referring to Drake's real name, Aubrey Graham.'Maybe what they're saying is true-maybe Graham is past his prime, over the hill,' Smith said. "We haven't seen Jermaine Cole in the game all night."Drake's alleged response to the leaked video hasn't clarified its authenticity, and he hasn't addressed it further. The incident occurred shortly after fake AI-generated nude images of Taylor Swift surfaced, prompting global support from her fans. Swift was reportedly frustrated by the images and considering legal action against their dissemination. The God's Plan rapper Drake seemingly addressed the alleged inappropriate video of him that went viral on X (formerly Twitter) on Tuesday. During a concert at Bridgestone Arena in Nashville, he took to the stage and flippantly referenced the viral video of him engaging in a sexual act. "I know y'all probably waiting on me to address this. So, the rumours are true." After a dramatic pause, he continued, " My dad is here!" and laughed off the situation again. The audience got the hint that Drake wasn't necessarily talking about his father being one among the crowd. About the leaked Drake video gone viralBefore his Wednesday comment at the concert, the 37-year-old musician started trending on X once a video of him emerged on the platform. It put the Grammy winner on display, lying in bed and engaging in a sexual act. Also read: Kanye West's new album mentions Taylor Swift, features NSFW Bianca Censori cover Since the Canadian rapper has not addressed the issue directly, many have also considered the play of AI generation. Much like Drake's sex tape being circulated on social media, a week ago NSFW deepfake photos of Taylor Swift had become the talk of the internet. However, unlike the actions followed in Swift's case, Drake has been treating the 'leak' lightheartedly. He allegedly laughed off the situation in his talks with Kick streamer Adin Ross, his close friend. Ross also reportedly claimed that Drake had sent him "like eight laughing emojis" in response to his cheeky voice note mentioning the video. Despite the alleged Drake sex tape clipping coming to light, the songwriter has remained unbothered and continued to share concert updates on his Instagram along with other photos on his stories. The original video was reportedly removed from X, but not before it garnered unbelievable views and downloads. The user who did the deed cannot be found either, as their account was suspended. In other news, the Nashville Drake concert for his It's All A Blur - Bg As The What tour is also making headlines for another reason. During his visit, the singer surprised a cancer survivor with $100,000. The 33-year-old Nashville native Schwalkier stood in the pit with a "Just Finished Chemo" sign. As other fans in the crowd shone their flashlights at the sign, Drake also noticed the "important moment". Calling her a "true soldier", he handed her a receipt, which Looking forward to seeing everyone at the meeting tomorrow and discussin our strategies with Namco Limited in 1955 founded by Masaya Nakamura as a Japanese multinational video game and entertainment company which operated video arcades, amusement parks, produced video games, films, toys, and arcade cabinets. Phantogram Brings High-Energy Performance to Fillmore Minneapolis Phantogram's recent show at the Fillmore Minneapolis was a testament to their enduring appeal, with the band delivering a high-energy performance that left the crowd eagerly anticipating their next visit. The event saw Phantogram showcasing their extensive catalog, and it's no surprise they've maintained such a strong following over the past decade. This latest stint only reaffirms the band's ability to consistently deliver captivating live performances. Helmet descended upon Minneapolis' Varsity Theater on March 10 for an electric celebration of the 30th anniversary of Betty, one of the most influential albums of the 1990s. The band, founded by Page Hamilton in 1989, became a driving force in alternative metal and post-hardcore scenes. Three Days Grace returned to The Target Center in Minneapolis, supporting Disturbed on their Sickness anniversary tour, with lead singer Adam Gontier making his comeback after departing the band in 2013. Meanwhile, American singer-songwriter Matt Nathanson has released music for over 30 years, gaining mainstream recognition with his 2007 album Some Mad Hope. His newest album, King of (Un)Simple, showcases his storytelling strengths and ability to connect feelings with melodies. Hope Woodard's concept "Boysober" has sparked a global movement among women looking to prioritize themselves over men after a string of relationships inspired her to take a break from sex and dating. The podcast explores modern love, romance, and self-discovery in a bold, unfiltered look at messy stories about relationships. On Purpose with Jay Shetty, the #1 Mental Health podcast, invites guests into conversations designed to help listeners become happier, healthier, and more healed. Explore Dateline NBC for free or subscribe to Dateline Premium for ad-free content and exclusive bonuses at DatelinePremium.com. Hope Woodard's personal journey of self-discovery led her to create the "boysober" movement, which encourages women to prioritize themselves over men. Her podcast, Boysober, delves into modern love, romance, and self-discovery with humor and vulnerability. Meanwhile, Ballen Studios presents a historical podcast that explores epic stories that shaped the world. Amy Robach and T.J. Holmes discuss the Diddy trial with Aubrey O'Day, offering unique perspectives and expertise. Financial brands can set themselves apart through visual storytelling, as explained by experts. The Motorsport Images Collections showcase events from 1895 to present day, with curated galleries and editors' picks available for browsing. Finally, the 1st GOBLIN Workshop on Knowledge Graph Technologies will be held in Leipzig, Germany, on June 12, 2025, highlighting the transformation of complex data analysis through knowledge graphs. Spanning finance, health, robotics, and more, the first DBpedia dataset was released 17 years ago! That's a massive milestone - from humble beginnings to over 4,380 GByte of data on the DBpedia Databus. We're saying thanks for the incredible journey! This year, we received 22 project proposals for the Google Summer of Code edition, supporting young developers in their open-source projects. The DBpedia Association has been around since 2014, professionalizing DBpedia and fostering a community network. With 20 language chapters focused on improving data from Wikipedia versions, DBpedia features an extensive network of international members representing industry and academia. Since its humble beginnings in Leipzig, DBpedia has grown into the main resource for Linked Open Data on the Web, boasting over 228 million entities! As popularity grew, so did community involvement, with numerous resources emerging to advance DBpedia's knowledge graph. With over 600k file downloads annually, discover and use the many datasets and tools developed for data access, quality control, and more! Documentation for both end-users and developers, with additional information provided.